There have been times when the wise and prudent men of the land have had inscribed that word upon their banner, as at once a safeguard and a warning to extremists of different and equally dangerous designs, but now the other word Rapical rings with a moral sense.

The Duty of the Country-the President's Power Must be Broken.

We trust the friends of the country will not be lulled into false hopes in reference to the President. A careful study of his character and of the principles governing his Administration makes us feel that as a ruler he is not to be trusted, and that he must be watched with suspicion and anxiety. We do not say a word in derogstien of the dignity of the Presidential office. The office is so exalted, and its powers so vast and far-reaching, that we owe it to our children that it should not be wantonly dedegraded. The President has degraded it. He has made his Administration a shameful page in our history. The country must not permit the page to close without a proper recompense. Our rulers may dishonor their office. We must not dishonor our-

Andrew Johnson stands forth among public men as the Gigantic Demagogue, of America. This is saying a good deal when we consider the manner of men the nation has at times produced. Men did not fail to see, however, that while this devotion was forced upon him by his class he sustained in John C. When the war came, he gave the Union cause a mild and incoherent support.
